

Will's Animal Rescue by: Will Cisco

One day Will heard there was a fire in Africa. A group of monkeys was trapped in the fire, and there were not enough people to get them out. So they made a call. They called Will.

Will said, "I love animals!" So he asked his mom and dad if he could go to help the monkeys. They said "yes."

So they drove to an airport. They both said "Good luck!". Off he went to save the monkeys.

When Will got there he went to a hut that had a huge screen which showed the monkeys screaming. The team leader came and said, “Are you Will Cisco?”

“Yes, I am. I’m ready to go!” The leader said, “Then let’s go!” So off they went to the fire.

The fire was HUGE! Will had never seen anything like it. It was so big, there was only a tiny place for the people to get in. They barely made it. They looked up and saw the monkeys in the tree. Only Will was small enough to get to them.

The leader said, “Will, you have to go in because we can’t make it through.” So Will went through the fire.

Will climbed the trees that the monkeys were in. The monkeys jumped on Will's back, and Will climbed back down the tree.

The fire was growing bigger. Will had to run if he wanted to make it back through the small opening. It's a good thing he was the fastest runner in second grade in his school because he zoomed right through. All of the monkeys were saved, but a few were hurt. They were taken to the veterinarian.

The leader rewarded Will with a medal for being so brave to go through the fire. Will rode a plane back home. There was not a fire in Africa again.
